Al-Andalus and its Legacies

Guest Editors: Ross Brann (Cornell University)
Esperanza Alfonso (Universidad Complutense-Madrid)

In the region of Iberia that was under Islamic control from the eight to the thirteen century, Hebrew and Romance literatures burgeoned alongside Arabic and created the distinctive hybrid culture invoked in the name of al-Andalus.

We seek papers that explore literary interactions and influences between cultures and languages in the period, papers that reveal the legacy of this culture for later literary production, or those that critique later representations of-Andalus in literary or historical texts.
